

If the order being appealed was made in the High Court or a county court, and did not relate to a family matter, it will usually have been allocated to the fast track or multi-track for the purpose of preparation of evidence and trial. If it was allocated to a track, you should tick the appropriate box to show which. (The notice of allocation or other order should give this information.)

You should also tick the appropriate box if the order you are appealing against was a case management decision to indicate the nature of the decision you wish to appeal. Case management decisions include orders relating to:

- the timetable for trial;
- the filing and exchange of information (of witnesses and experts);
- disclosure of documents (papers the court said you must make available to the other parties); or
- adding a party to a claim.

A grant or refusal of interim relief might include an injunction, freezing order, an order for the detention or custody or preservation of relevant property, or a financial order. You should tick the previous appeal decision box if this is a second appeal and you wish to appeal against the outcome of the first appeal hearing.
